

September 11, 2008

I was introduced to Aasys Group at a prior employer and was very impressed with the way the company functioned and responded to our technology needs.

When I arrived at Putnam State Bank, we were using a company out of Atlanta called Safe Systems. After working with Safe Systems and becoming very frustrated with their operations, I began the process of bringing Aasys Group to this bank. The main reason being that Aasys can provide me on-site technical help with very little notice. The other company was based in Atlanta and could only provide phone support. They would come to our bank, but the cost of their travel was prohibitive.

During 2008, we have replaced four servers, added one new server, upgraded our backup system, and began a proactive approach to our IT area. We plan on replacing two other servers next year as well as add products like smart phones.

I could never have done any of this without Aasys.

I would highly recommend this company for any financial institution whose size keeps them from having a network engineer on staff. Even if you do, Aasys can provide consulting services to your IT staff to keep them up to date on the latest technologies.

Sincerely,
